

What can we do about police brutality? Can we rely on the police to investigate themselves? Can we rely on government to punish bad policemen? Will police brutality suddenly stop despite it continuing for decades?

We must consider that the founders of the US knew that governments become oppressive. They knew that oppressive governments don't fix themselves. And, they gave us the First and Second Amendments. Everyone knows the First Amendment, but government and globalists have intentionally confused people about the Second Amendment.

The Second Amendment has nothing to do with hunting. The Second Amendment is primarily there so that we can fight back against oppressive governments, even if that oppressive government is our own.

You have the right to carry guns. The 2nd amendment gives you the unconditional right to bear arms. There is no restriction on the type of arms in the 2nd amendment, and the amendment forbids the government from making any restriction. This means, in accordance to the Second Amendment, you have the right to conceal carry any sort of weapon you want.

Unfortunately, our current federal and state governments have infringed on this right to bear arms. They forbid concealed weapons; they forbid types of weapons; and they require you get licenses for weapons. All of these are infringements on the Second Amendment.

If you want to prevent police brutality, police must fear consequences for being brutal. You can't rely on the court system to provide these consequences. The courts make too much money from the revenue police generate with their tickets and activities. Instead, demand your Second Amendment right and be armed wherever you go. Regardless of what any inferior law says, the Constitution is still the supreme law of the land, and you are well within your rights to follow it.
